Jennifer loves using art and storytelling as a tool for social change. She has spent much of her career building community programs and events that bring people together in meaningful ways and believes that sharing our time, our stories, and seeking ways to collaborate are the keys to understanding what connects us. She studied Communications and Sociology at Portland State University, with a focus in reflective conversation and group facilitation.

Jennifer is a music enthusiast and amateur record collector. Some of her favorite things are dancing around the kitchen while cooking for family and friends, hiking the PNW, and creating art—whatever that means in the moment.
